

This fragment of a story was found and translated at the Clan Council 1107. It appears to refer to Bran, Lord of the Fated, who resides over the underworld realm of Caer Rigor.

“But Bran bid them to silence “I am sorry, I can not accept. Anu has other plans for me. My time left on this world is growing very short and you must aid me in my journey to the other world to watch over our people who have failed Anu”

So the druid known among the clansman as the Guardian brought forward the Gateway to the otherworld and placed it on the Great Shrine’s mighty altar, and in the true name of the Lord and Guardian of the gateway to the other world, he invoked its powers to open the gates to eternity.

Bran thanked all those around him and bid them to stay true to Anu. He then stepped through the gateway and disappeared never to be seen again.

The Druids proclaimed Bran a great warrior and true hero of the land. But they condemned his clan for their betrayal. They proclaimed that the clan would be forgotten, as if they had never existed: their name would be no more: their heroic tales would never be told again, they would be forgotten for eternity.

Only Bran’s name would be remembered and exalted: only his feats would be told again and again, and he would be revered forever as Bran the Lord of the Fated.”